

In recognition of the 35th anniversary of the American Eagle Program, the United States Mint is proud to introduce new designs for the 2021 American Eagle Gold and Silver Bullion Coins. The coins feature new reverse designs and are minted with the highest level of detail, including enhanced obverse designs that honor the artists' original creative vision. Coinciding with this redesign, both the one-ounce gold and one-ounce silver bullion coins now include anti-counterfeit features, including a reed pattern variation and a tamper-evident seal applied to their packaging.

CONSUMER AWARENESS

When purchasing bullion coins due diligence is important.

The market (spot) prices of gold, silver, platinum, and palladium fluctuate daily. Research and become familiar with the current market prices of the precious metal you're thinking of buying.

- In addition to the market price, have an understanding of the current market premiums associated with the gold, silver, platinum or palladium bullion coin being considered.
- These prices are reported in many newspapers and online. Many bullion dealers report these prices online as well.
- If you are offered a bullion coin at a price below the current market price, exercise extra scrutiny.

Know your bullion coin vendor, retailer, or dealer.

- The United States Mint sells its bullion coins to the public through a network of Authorized Purchasers (APs/primary distributors).
- A list of the current APs is posted on the United States Mint's website.
- APs are required by the United States Mint to maintain a two-way market for buying and selling its bullion coins among the public, bullion dealers, wholesalers, and retailers.
- Research (know and understand) the reputation of your bullion dealer or retailer prior to completing a purchase.
- Use caution when responding to advertisements in classified pages, online forums, and other sources.
- Does the coin meet each of the coin's published specifications as to weight and diameter? See official United States Mint specifications.
- Are all of the key features present?
